

Sounds perfect to me Jim! 93/94 was the year I decided to open a brewery. I first tried Triple Bock a few years after we opened so good Karma a bounds for this way into the recipe. From Dogfish's side I'd like for us to try something as fundamentally far outside the box (or barrel) as what you did with Triple Bock. For decades craft brewers have been doing amazing creative stuff with three of the four main ingredients in beer: yeast, hops, and Barley. <sup>But what about water?</sup> Let's use Rose Water to brew this Savor collaboration. It's basically the hydrosil (I had to look that word up) portion of the distillate of rose pedals.

Or as Turkish chefs call it: the good shit. We'll run 50 kegs through our pot still and send them up to Boston for us to brew with if that sounds good to you. Keep me posted on where you think this recipe should go next!
